The Master of Arts in Creative Media (MACM) programme aims at shaping the future researchers, intellectuals and cultural engineers of the creative economy. This selective programme offers a humanities-oriented curriculum complementing the School of Creative Media's mission to develop a range of aesthetic, theoretical and techno-scientific expertise in the fields of new media arts. The course offerings are structured around three concentrations.

1 New Media Arts and Aesthetics: This includes several courses which provide a deep understanding of contemporary approaches to arts rooted in our School's tradition and expertise in avant-garde, experimental and neonarrative New Media Arts.

2 Critical Theories for Arts and Technology: This proposes several courses of advanced studies in contemporary thought and in new media theory in which our School has developed a strong international presence. This concentration allows our students to be part of the most recent intellectual debates in Western/non-Western contemporary philosophies.

3 Interventions in Media Cultures: This fosters students' capacity to intervene in the social, mediatic, regulatory, urban environment. This concentration takes advantage of the strong integration of our School in its cultural, artistic and economic regional context.

MACM graduates take high level positions in the creative media industries and art administration, become specialised journalists, work in the private research sector, publishing industries or in cultural policy sectors. The rigorous intellectual foundation provided by this programme allows its graduates to pursue further studies in highly ranked PhD programmes.
